11. Brief Description

11.1 Introduction-

- 12 One Week FDP on Genetically Modified Animals and Plant species has been arranged at Dr. CV Raman University by the department of Life science in association with Forest Development Corporation, Raipur on 15/11/2021 to 20/11/2021. Gene fusion is the core component of GMOs. Nature enables and encourages some degree of gene mixing, but it also sets some boundaries that only man is willing to breach. A GMO can be a plant, an animal, or a microorganism. Almost everything today is commercial GMOs are plants. The main distinction between genetic manipulation and conventional hybridization is that the former is an imposed hybridization that even crosses the line between species.

11.2 Objective –The FDP aims to following objectives:

1. To make faculties aware about GMOs.
2. To encourage GMOs research among scientific community.

11.3 Significance-

The biggest advancement in science for the twenty-first century may be genetic engineering. Compared to crossbreeding, which has been used for centuries to change the genetic makeup of plants and animals, it is much more exact. However, consumer opposition is currently advancing more quickly than science itself due to consumers' ignorance of this topic. These concerns won't go away unless governments show that approvals and labelling regulations are just as adequate as those in other fields..
